

The travel tracking application we are designing is mostly designed to be used on mobile devices. The basic idea behind the app is a user would use it to log their travel events. This means it will mostly be used on mobile devices, such as smart phones, between a variety of transitional periods. This would include before and after driving, walking, and other such activities.